

| Trap Sets  |   |   |
|---|---|---|
| Set  | Location and Description   | Furbearers   |
| Bank Den (including Waterline Bank Den and Beaver Den) | Below water surface at entrance to a den along stream or pond side  | Muskrat, mink, Northern river otter   |
| Blind  | In a narrow opening (natural or man-made) in furbearer's travel line; trap staked in water for drowning where possible  | Muskrat, raccoon, mink, coyote, bobcat  |
| Canal/Channel  | In underwater channels used by furbearers   | Beaver, Northern river otter  |
| Carcass  | Put dirt hole or flat sets about 30 yards away from a carcass   | Coyote  |
| Cubby  | In an enclosure (natural or man-made; in hollow tree, rocks) with bait and trap inside  | Muskrat, raccoon, weasel, mink, skunk, American marten, fisher, opossum, bobcat |
| Den/Culvert  | At the entrance to the nutria's den or in a culvert   | Nutria  |
| Dirt Hole  | Upwind of a fox travel lane in open country; a dug hole with bait inside and trap in front  | Skunk, opossum, red fox, gray fox, coyote                                       |
| Drain Tile   | Along natural openings and drainage ditches that feed into larger streams   | Raccoon   |
| Feed Bed   | On a feed bed, at site where muskrats approach; trap staked in water for drowning   | Muskrat   |
| Flag   | Hang a "flag" from a tree limb over a dirt mound with the trap buried in the mound  | Bobcat  |
| Flat   | A variation of the dirt hole set; instead of burying bait, place an object on the ground to lure the coyote   | Coyote  |
| Float  | On a floating log or man-made platform  | Muskrat, nutria   |
| Latrine Site   | In the area where the river otter habitually returns for toileting, set a foothold trap with branches around it   | Northern river otter  |
| Mound  | On an elevated structure (anthill, straw bale) with large bait on ground below  | Red fox; gray fox; opossum; skunk   |
| Obstruction  | Variation on a blind set, where an obstruction forces the furbearer to leave the bank and enter the water; trap staked for drowning   | Mink  |
| Open Water   | On stream bank near water's edge; bait placed on mud mound, trap under water below mud  | Beaver  |
| Overhanging Bank                                       | Below water surface under overhanging bank with a drag attached for drowning; lure placed on the bank under the overhang  | Raccoon   |
| Pocket   | In a tunnel dug into steep bank of stream or pond, with bottom sloping upward from 2" below water level to 3" to 4" above water level; bait and lure at back of hole, trap at opening | Raccoon, mink, Northern river otter   |
| Pole   | Under ice; pole set on pond bottom at right angle to bottom, extending upward through ice; bait and trap attached to pole   | Beaver, American marten, fisher   |
| Post or Flat   | In a trap bed located about 6" from a stick, post, tuft of grass, chunk of wood, or similar attractor; urine is placed on the post  | Red fox; gray fox; opossum; skunk   |
| Runway   | In shallow water where muskrats travel back and forth; box trap used when drowning is possible; bodygrip trap used when water is too shallow  | Muskrat   |
| Scent Mound  | On stream bank near water's edge; lure placed on mud mound, trap under water below mud  | Beaver  |
| Scent Post   | Along the coyote's typical path, erect a post over the trap and put urine on the post   | Coyote  |
| Slide  | Just under water at point where furbearer enters or leaves water  | Muskrat, beaver   |
| Spring Run   | At the point where a small stream enters a larger body of water; foothold trap staked for drowning  | Muskrat, mink   |
| Trail  | Along trails where the furbearer usually travels, especially where the trail narrows, set the trap in the existing groove or dig your own   | Nutria, Northern river otter, bobcat  |
| Trash Pile   | Pile trash or litter over bait to make the area look like leftover food has been covered up, and put the trap in front of the pile  | Bobcat  |
